

Honor Roll of Donors 2012

North Carolina Agricultural and Technical State University

California native TONY BURRUS, 18, has goals of earning his M.D. and Ph.D. in neuroscience, and he already has taken several steps toward them. Burrus spent the summer in Rome, N.Y., conducting nanotechnology research as it relates to brain-like computer structures. One day he hopes to conduct research on different areas of the brain and solve medicinal problems. An interdisciplinary physics major (chemistry minor) with a 4.0 GPA, he says that the education he is receiving at A&T will give him the foundation to pursue a career as a neuroscientist as well as instill key values that will carry with him throughout his life.

Your Gift Matters

Dear North Carolina A&T Supporter:

It is with heartfelt gratitude that I offer the Honor Roll of Donors for fiscal year 2012.

Giving to North Carolina Agricultural and Technical State University helps to enrich the lives of students who seek knowledge and personal growth. In addition, your gift in support of the university's mission yields an unparalleled return on investment as N.C. A&T prepares students to enhance the quality of life for themselves and other citizens of this nation and the world at large.

Your gift also provides an opportunity for you to share what is important to you and teach the value of philanthropy, sustain and support key initiatives, serve as an example for others that philanthropy can make a difference, meet the needs of the university community, and reap tax benefits.

As you peruse the lists and other information of this report, please know that you and each individual and business listed have made a positive impact on the lives of our current students—including those featured in this report—and future alumni. We thank you for your continued interest and support of North Carolina A&T State University.

Sincerely,

Harold L. Martin Sr.
Chancellor

AN INTERDISCIPLINARY APPROACH

N.C. A&T's Center for Excellence in Post-Harvest Technologies at the North Carolina Research Campus nurtures new talent in agricultural sciences through the interdisciplinary Kannapolis Scholars program. As a participant in the Kannapolis Scholars Program, Saeed Hayek studies microbiology and food safety.

Hayek has come full circle. The native of the Gaza Strip started his education in nutrition and food science at the University of Jordan, then veered off into computer science for his master's degree, but now has returned to the study of food microbiology at N.C. A&T, where he is pursuing a Ph.D. in energy and environmental systems with a concentration in food science. Along the way, he has discovered the value of taking a broad view on the issue of food safety, a topic of particular interest for his future career in research.

"Everyone thinks his own research is the most important thing. But when you look at how other scholars work, that's what opens other ideas in your mind," said Hayek.

For instance, he's learned how natural antimicrobials from plants could be enlisted in the service of protecting food from pathogens—a topic he never would have thought much about prior to participating in the Kannapolis Scholars Program, which provides USDA funding support to doctoral level scientists and encourages them to approach problem solving from multiple perspectives.

Hayek says that interdisciplinary approaches have expanded his thinking about food safety. Thanks to the program, which brought Ph.D. students to the North Carolina Research Campus in Kannapolis for the past three summers, Hayek learned about phytochemistry at A&T's Center for Excellence in Post-Harvest Technologies, which is housed at the campus. During his summer there, Hayek learned how some plant compounds could be applied to food safety while also conferring health benefits.

"I've learned a lot of new things about the relationship of gut flora to health and food," he says. "We always think of bacteria as pathogens, but the benefits of bacteria are innumerable."

Organizations, Corporations, Associations, and Foundations

This report reflects contributions of cash and in-kind gifts received during fiscal year July 1, 2011, through June 30, 2012, inclusive of contributions to the general university, alumni association and university foundation. Multi-year pledges are counted in the year cash is received.

Every effort was made to ensure accuracy of lists. In the event erroneous information is included, please call the North Carolina A&T State University Office of Advancement Services, 336-334-7600.

MATH? NO PROBLEM!

For some people, it can take decades to find their passion. Jade Jenkins has known hers since age 9, when she was a tutor in her aunt's kindergarten class.

Fast forward 11 years, and today the 20-year-old junior with a 4.0 GPA is a secondary education major specializing in mathematics. Not surprisingly, she has been tutoring in the Center for Academic Excellence since the spring semester of her freshman year.

Jenkins wants to teach high school algebra, saying that a lot of people in higher math stumble because they didn't get the subject. "Algebra is the ABCs of higher math; so if they get that, they're more likely to understand calculus and other courses," she said.

The thing that sets Jenkins apart is her focus on concept rather than specific questions. Understanding the concept allows her students to apply them in various situations.

"When you go into a job, they're not going to give you a worksheet. You will have real life problems and situations," said Jenkins. "Strategic questioning is important. They'll get the answer right and they also need to be able to explain it."

Jenkins said teaching is a reciprocal experience and she learned that while taking two classes in Costa Rica the summer before her sophomore year: Spanish and International Relations in Latin America.

"It was a different style of teaching and learning there. It's the same here; every student is a new experience."

Jenkins also has completed an internship at Howard University that was funded by Educational Testing Services. She is a member of the North Carolina A&T State University chapter of Student North Carolina Association of Educators, the student chapter of the North Carolina Council of Teachers of Mathematics, and the Math Association of America. She is an Aggie Alumni Scholar.

ANY WAY POSSIBLE

Sophomore Ombeni Idassi has wanted to be a doctor since he was a child.

The 19-year-old is a biology/pre-med major aspires to become a pediatric oncologist. He knows this will take a lot of work but he has already risen to the challenge. So far, he's maintained a 4.0 GPA and has been accepted into the Brody School of Medicine at East Carolina University through the ECU Medical School Early Assurance program.

"Having African parents telling you at a young age that you will become a doctor is one motivation, but I also have to say just going to the doctor as an elementary student and interacting with my pediatrician was the biggest motivation for me," said Idassi. "(As a child) I knew this would be the field I would love to be in once I get older."

To be accepted in the ECU program, Idassi had to post a high school unweighted GPA of 3.5 or better, be screened by that biology department, and interview with admissions and professors in the school of medicine. Acceptance to the program, should he choose to participate, allows him to bypass the Medical College Admission Test (MCAT).

Idassi intends to pursue an M.D./Ph.D. to research and develop his own cancer therapy to better combat the disease and complications from therapies being used now.

"Hopefully, I (will) discover something that will lead to less suffering for the patients. I just want to make a difference in the world any way I can."

To get a jump start on lab research, last summer Idassi attended the Summer Research Internship Program at the University of Virginia and did research on E. coli and other highly infectious bacteria. Until he graduates, Idassi will be working in the pre-med track within the biology department where he currently has a departmental scholarship.

VICTOR VIGOYA, a construction-management major who graduated in May, worked on Habitat for Humanity homes in New Orleans's Lower Ninth Ward during two separate trips through the university. Working pretty much from sunup to sundown, and training other A&T students from different academic backgrounds, Vigoya said it was a humbling experience. "I grew up believing it's always important to give back, and there is nothing that will bring more joy to a person than helping the community."

EYE-OPENING EXPERIENCE

In a land void of power lines, electrical engineering major Destenie Nock used creative engineering to create a device that has the potential to improve the quality of education and empower girls in a Malawi school.

Last summer, Nock spent four weeks in southeast Africa teaching girls at Domasi Demonstration Primary School how to make reusable feminine products (pads).

“Instead of raising money to buy pads, we raised money for supplies,” she said.

In previous years, students chosen to travel to Malawi were asked to raise funds or to collect sanitary pads. In Malawi, a lot of families do not have the money necessary to buy disposable pads, and that meant some girls missed three to five days of school per month.

To help combat the problem, the team traveled with those items but there never seemed to be enough to get them through the year. In Nock’s forward thinking, she thought it would make more of an impact to show the girls how to make reusable pads, aptly named “Destiny Pads.”

Nock researched the customs to find out if this would be acceptable, researched designs and helped teach all of the girls how to hand sew and repair the pads. She and program coordinator Dr. Elizabeth Barber worked with 85 girls and 11 teachers on making the pads.

The trip to Malawi was an eye-opening experience for the senior from Lusby, Md.

“Life is like a journey until you find yourself, and you can’t find yourself until you get lost,” she said. “When I was in Malawi, I never felt so lost in my life.”

Nock says as an engineer, the first thought to make an impact is something technical. This experience for her showed her there is not always a complicated solution to the world’s problems.

“Sometimes the needs are so basic you don’t need to do anything overly technical to make an impact,” she said.

To KELLY MEADOWS, who graduated in May with a bachelor's degree in agricultural education, agriculture is so much broader than farming. "It's about protecting and improving everything we need as human beings for our existence. People don't think about it, but without agriculture, we couldn't exist." Once she completes her master's program, she intends to teach agricultural education in North Carolina public schools so she can give back and offer the same experience to a new generation.
